

What is a Multilateral Contribution?

A multilateral contribution is one for which donors don't impose conditionalities, thus allowing WFP to determine the country programme or its activities in which the contribution will be used and how it will be used.

What is the importance of Multilateral Funds?

Multilateral contributions are crucial for our emergency responses, protracted relief and recovery efforts, whenever and wherever needs are greatest. Multilateral funds provide WFP with greatest flexibility and predictability to kick start operations, fund neglected crises and ultimately enhance our response to those most in need.

For reports on WFP's use of multilateral funds in past years, please see WFP's Use of Multilateral Funding report on this link: <http://www.wfp.org/funding>
